My dear Anna:-

Mrs. Johnson, Bessie, Loftin and I tender our warmest congratulations to the young man in question. I do not doubt but that you too are to be congratulated but do not recall him. Allow me to add that we one and all rejoice with you in your new found happiness. Yes, I think your father would have you come to me among the first as you have done and there is nobody outside your immediate family who could wish you more happiness in the years to come than I do.

I hope that your dear mother is well. I know that you are enjoying the comfort of being once more at Fort. Hamilton. It is a restful spot, an ideal place to summer.

I have not been very well for two or three days; nothing serious, but know that on that account you will excuse brevity and a typewritten letter.

Mrs. Johnson, Loftin and Bessie unite with me in warmest love to you, your mother, Harry and family, and also to Dick when you see him, and with warmest regards to the important gentleman, believe me to be,

Most sincerely and affectionately,

Your friend,

Sam R. Johnson
