

From: New York Times Magazine
April 19th

'NO SUBSIDY'

TO THE EDITOR:

Does not Senator Javits realize that if enough people enjoyed opera, symphony, the ballet, etc., they would pay admission to the performances? They would support the cultural arts in the same way as they support a thriving theatre, horse racing, night clubs, bridge parties, and other forms of leisure activities.

Only a small percentage patronize the so-called cultural leisure-time pursuits, even in such cities as New York, Chicago and Boston, where they are available and at not too great a cost. Therefore, why should the majority of us be harassed by more taxes in order to subsidize those smaller groups who enjoy cultural arts?

DOROTHY SARA
New York.

Dorothy Sara is a member of the faculty of the
HENRY GEORGE SCHOOL