

To the Business Editor:

Rich people do not make jobs. Jobs are made by a mandate of nature that we must work in order to live. ("In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread.") There were no rich men to greet the Pilgrims coming to the New World, or the pioneers going west. The wily people who met later immigrants were out to fleece them.

The one who wants a person's services is not "giving" him work or "making" a job for him. He is trading one service for another, quid pro quo.

239
4173 55 W 42
ROBERT CLANCY
President, Henry George Institute
New York, Sept. 19